Closing the 'Skills Gap' by Preparing Young People for Today's Job Market

According to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, there are 5.6 million jobs that remain unfilled because employers cannot find workers with the required skill sets. At the same time, there are an equal number of young Americans aged 16-24 who are neither employed nor enrolled in school. Some estimate that this 'skills gap' costs our economy $160 billion annually.

Every year, the David L. Carrasco Job Corps Center has provided education and training to several hundred young adults preparing them to find quality jobs and become contributing members of their communities. Currently, 85 percent of students obtain full-time employment, enroll in higher education or enlist in the military upon completion at the David L. Carrasco campus. The David L. Carrasco Job Corps Center is part of a national network of residential campuses administered by the U.S. Department of Labor. Odle Management manages the day-to-day operations at David L. Carrasco, along with 8 other campuses across the country.
